With newly crowned MXGP Champion Romain Febvre leading the way aboard his Yamaha Factory Racing Yamalube machine, several of America's biggest names from the Pro Motocross Championship are prepared to go head-to-head against Europe's best in a one-time-only showdown.

While the premier MXGP class will be spearheaded by the likes of World Championship veterans like Febvre, Red Bull KTM Factory Racing's eight-time world titleholder Tony Cairoli, and Team HRC's Gautier Paulin, the lineup of Pro Motocross stars is impressive.

The Rockstar Energy Husqvarna Factory Racing duo of Jason Anderson, capping off his first full season of premier class competition, and Christophe Pourcel, a former World Champion, each garnered overall podium results during the Pro Motocross season. Monster Energy Kawasaki's Josh Grant is the hometown favorite, hailing from nearby Riverside, and will swing a leg over the Factory Kawasaki one last time in 2015. Red Bull KTM's Dean Wilson will continue his comeback from a serious knee injury and make just his fourth motocross start of the season, while Davi Millsaps will make his highly anticipated debut for BTOSports.com KTM, just a handful of weeks after signing with the team.

Serving arguably the most intriguing role of the Pro Motocross contingent is Yamalube/Star Racing Yamaha's Cooper Webb. After racing to a pair of overall victories in the 250 Class this summer, the newest member of the AMA US Motocross Team for the FIM Monster Energy Motocross of Nations will make his 450cc debut at Glen Helen in the MXGP division.

In addition to the excitement surrounding which rider will emerge victorious in the world's showcase class, the wild MX2 division is sure to produce unpredictable competition. With the championship hunt coming down to the wire between Honda Gariboldi's Tim Gajser, Red Bull KTM Factory Racing's Paul Jonass and Monster Energy DBT Kawasaki's Max Anstie, there will be plenty of drama in the battle to crown a champion. However, with the addition of former world champion and Red Bull KTM's Pro Motocross Championship runner-up Marvin Musquin, the Troy Lee Designs/Lucas Oil/Red Bull/KTM duo of Jessy Nelson and Shane McElrath, as well as a competitor from legendary Monster Energy/Pro Circuit/Kawasaki stable, a little added shakeup to the title fight is to be expected.

Cooper Webb will make his 450cc debut at the USGP in preparation for his inaugural trip to the FIM Motocross of Nations in France.
